A heartwarming and hilarious follow-up to East is East that takes the boisterous Khan family from bleak Salford back to the hot dust of rural Pakistan.

After insulting his father's country bumpkin background, teenager Sajid (Aqib Khan) is forced to accompany his dad on a month-long trip to Pakistan, to learn the customs of his family's life.

George tries to discipline his defiant son, but he has his own ghosts; this trip is his first since he deserted his first wife and young family thirty years ago.

A moving and oftentimes humorous portrait of family, love, loss, and self-discovery that deftly juggles two chronologies to tell the heartwarming story of two major points in the life of Oliver (Ewan McGregor, Ghost Writer), a talented illustrator.

One timeline follows the deterioration of Oliver's father (Christopher Plummer, The Last Station) who is dying of cancer and who, at age 75, has decided to come out of the closet.

The other follows Oliver's journey to come to terms with his grief in the wake of his father's death.
